September 24TH

Summer came and is going quickly. Now it's back to school for the kids. I hope all of you have a wonderful Labor Day and weekend. Please be safe!

I would like to invite all of you to a BBQ this month on Wednesday, Sept 14th. For more information see page 3.

The “Walk to Remember” is a time of year where all of us help raise funds for the Alzheimer’s Network to help with classes and support for families. We will do a bake sale this month to support the cause. See page 3 for more information about the bake sale and the walk.

Sincerely,
Michele Nixon & Hawthorne Staff

Fear and hope: debating Alzheimer's testing, prevention

Whether there's any point in taking advantage of testing to diagnose Alzheimer's disease early and whether there are preventive steps that really matter are among the debates that emerged from an international conference focused the disease this week.

It's an important issue that matters to Americans and Europeans, according to one study presented at the confab in France. Respondents said they fear Alzheimer's only a little bit less than they fear cancer. A phone survey of 2,678 adults across the U.S.. And Europe found that a quarter fear getting the disease and more than 85 percent said they'd see a doctor for signs of memory loss, while 94 percent said they would encourage family members to do so, according to an article in International Business Times.

"Doctors are arguing about whether to test patients for signs of the incurable disease and tell them the result," according to USA Today.

There are new ways to test, including brain scans, an eye test and a blood test, and more on the way. But the thinking behind the opposition to testing comes from multiple trains of thought:

— Some of the tests will find brain plaques that will likely not turn into the dreaded Alzheimer's, which is the most common form of dementia, impacting 5 million Americans. It could be unnecessary expense and stress.

— Even if it is actual Alzheimer's, there is no cure. Drugs can help about half of patients with the symptoms, but only in the short-term. Here experts divide, some advocating providing early help if possible and others saying basically that if there's no cure, there's no point.

— There are conditions, including sleep disorders, thyroid troubles, vitamin deficiency and depression — all treatable — that can mimic Alzheimer's, so screening can lead to a real diagnosis and provide help.

USA Today noted that "testing someone with symptoms is far less controversial than testing people with no symptoms, but a lot of fear. Doctors worry that these newer methods, such as an easier type of brain scan that's expected to be available within months, will be directly marketed to the public, prompting expensive and excessive testing based on fear."

The conference also highlighted the fact that some researchers believe Alzheimer's, for many, is not a genetic foregone conclusion. At the international conference, researchers said half of cases are at least impacted by lifestyle choices and outlined seven things people can do in mid-life to reduce the risk later of developing Alzheimer's, according to a report on MSNBC.com. Those include not smoking or stopping if you already smoke, increased physical activity, more mental activity, controlling blood pressure and diabetes, and managing obesity and depression, it said.

September Birthdays

Those born September 1 to 22 are hardworking, practical Virgos. Virgos are often kind and dedicated caregivers. They are at home in the company of animals. Often reserved, Virgos shy away from attention. Libras born between September 23 and 30 seek balance and harmony just like their symbol, the scales. They are very social, seek compromise, and have strong powers of critical thinking.
